

Many materials commonly used in school buildings, such as carpet, upholstery and particleboard, emit Volatile Organic Compounds (VOCs) which cause headaches, nausea, and eye, nose and throat irritation, and can damage the liver, kidneys and nervous system. Some, such as formaldehyde, are known or likely to cause cancer and can trigger asthma attacks.

The use of home and garden pesticides (weed and bug killers) is associated with increased likelihood of some kinds of childhood leukemia and brain cancer. Pesticides can also damage children's coordination, memory and stamina, including their ability to learn, play or draw a picture.

Be a Part of the Solution!

The Alliance for a Healthy Tomorrow is a coalition of citizens, scientists, health professionals, workers, and educators seeking preventive action on toxic hazards. We will create proactive policies to prevent harm before the damage is done, and to choose the safest alternatives. We believe protection of our health must become the first priority of government policy.

Please sign up below to help. A few minutes of your time is all that is needed. Make your voice heard by your elected representatives! You can play a vital role in our work to protect children's health by promoting government policies that require a transition to the safest alternative materials, technologies, and products. Thank you for your willingness to get involved.
